Not illustrated. 1854 Excerpt: . . . they often painted the lower half of their columns a bright red, leaving the rest uncoloured: and where the garden was small, its wall was frequently tinted to deceive the eye as to its extent, imitating trees, birds, temples, fcc, in perspective; a meretricious delusion which the graceful pedantry of Pliny himself adopted with a complacent pride in its ingenuity. The novelist then proceeds to describe the house known by the of the Tragic Poet. (See plan lo. 2 on page 38. ) You enter by a long and narrow vestibule, on the floor of which is the image of a dog in mosaic, with the well-known Cave canem, or Beware the dog. On either side is a chamber of some size: for the interior part of the house not being large enough to contain the two great divisions of private and public departments, these two...
